Gibson GS-3JY The Gibson GS-3JY, also known as the Magnatone or Super Jumbo, was a guitar manufactured by Gibson Guitar Corporation in the 1970s and 1980s. It was the first major production model of the modern acoustic guitar and was the first model to feature the Flying V tailpiece. The main body is made from all solid maple and measures 43 1/2" (110.9 cm) long, with a scale length of 24" (61 cm). It weighs about 6 lbs. (3 kg) and has a top maple fretboard with 21 medium-jumbo frets. The body is designed with a "W" shape to help with vibrato; at the time of its introduction this was considered revolutionary. There are 2 through-holes at the 12th fret and 1 at the 6th. While it shares some design elements with the SG, it is not an SG because it has no electronics and its volume knob is made from bakelite. It also has a 82157476af
